

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

By VAUGHAN KESTER

(Copyright, 1911, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company.)

"Permit me to relieve your apprehensions. It is Turberville who has received the appointment. Would you like to examine my credentials?—I have them by me—no? I am obliged for your introduction. It could not have come at a more timely moment." The judge seemed to dismiss Pentress contemptuously. Once more he faced the packed benches. "Put down your weapons," he commanded. "This man Murrell will not be released. At the first effort to rescue he will be shot where he sits—we have sworn it—his plotting is at an end." He stalked nearer the benches. "Not one chance in a thousand remains for him. Elites here or he lives to be taken before every judge in the State. If necessary, until we find one with courage to try him! Make no mistake—it will be the end of the justice to allow the State court's jurisdiction in this case; and I pledge myself to furnish evidence which will start him well on his road to the gallows." The judge, a tremendous figure, came stalked still nearer the benches. Outfacing the crowd, a sense of the splendor of the part he was being called upon to play flowed through him like some elixir; he felt that he was transcending himself, that his inspiration was drawn from the hidden springs of the spirit, and that he could neither falter nor go astray. "You don't know what you are meddling with! This man has plotted to lay the State in ruins—he has been arming the negroes—it is incredible that you should allow this to such a man. I say, go home and thank God for your escape! For the others—his shaggy brows met in a menacing frown—"If they force our hand we will lose them John Murrell's dead carcass—that's our answer to their challenge!"

He strode out among the gun muzzles which waved where they still covered him. He was thinking of Murrell's Mahaffy, who had said he was still a man to be reckoned with. For the comfort of his own soul he was proving it. "Do you know what a terrible insurrection means? You men who have wives and daughters, have you thought of their fate? Of the monstrous savagery to which they would be exposed? Do you believe he could limit and control it? Look at him! Why, he has never had a consideration outside of his own safety, and yet he expects you to risk your necks to save him? He has made me leave the State before the first blow was struck—his business was all down river—but we are going to keep him here to answer for his crimes! The law, as implacable as it is, has put its mark on him—the shadow in which he sits is the shadow of the gallows!"

The judge paused, but the only sound in that expectant silence was the heavy breathing of the crowd. He drew his unwieldy form erect, while his voice rumbled on, aggressive and threatening in its every intonation. He defended something that no longer existed. Your organization is wrecked, your signals and passwords are known, your secrets have become public property, you can even produce a list of your members; there are none of you who do not stand in imminent peril—yet understand, I have no wish to strike at those who have mislead or corrupted into joining Murrell's band." The judge's sudden old face glowed now with the magnanimity of his sentiments. "But I have no feeling of mercy for you! Put down your guns!—you can only kill us after we have killed Murrell—but you can't kill the law! If the arch conspirator dies in his room and hour, on whose head will the punishment fall? He swung around its ponderous arm in a sweeping gesture and shook a fat but expressive forefinger in the faces of those nearest him. "On yours—and yours—and yours!"

Across the space that separated them the judge grinned his triumph at his enemy. He had known when Pentress entered the room that a word or a sign from him would precipitate a riot, but he knew now that neither his word nor this sign would be given. Then, quite suddenly, he saw that the judge, put by foot Pentress yielded ground before his advance. A murderous light flashed from the judge's bloodshot eyes, and his right hand was reaching toward the frayed lapels of his coat.

"Look out! He's getting ready to shoot!" cried a frightened voice. Instantly by doors and windows the crowd, seized with inexplicable panic, emptied itself into the courtyard yard. Pentress was caught up in the rush and borne from the room and from the building. When the judge reached the space below the steps he turned. The judge was in the doorway, the center of a struggling group. Mr. Bowen, the minister, Mr. Murrell, and others were vainly seeking to pluck his arms.

"Draw—draw you!" he roared at Pentress, as he wrenched himself free, and the crowd surged to the right and left as Pentress was seen to reach for his pistol. Mr. Saul made a last frantic effort to restrain his friend. He seized the judge's arm just as the latter's finger pressed the trigger, and an instant later Pentress staggered back with the judge's bullet in his shoulder.

CHAPTER XLIII.

Good Times Coming.

It was not strange that a number of gentlemen in and about Raleigh yielded to an overmastering impulse to visit newer lands, nor was it strange that the initial steps looking toward the indulgence of their desires should have been taken in secrecy. Mr. Peggie was one of the first to leave. Mr. Saul, having formed him of the judge's declared purpose of shooting him on sight. Even without this useful hint the tavern keeper had known that he should experience intense embarrassment in meeting the judge; this was now a dreary certainty.

"You reckon he means near all he says?" he asked, his fat sides shaking. "I'd take his word a heap quicker than I would most folks," answered Mr. Saul, with conviction.

Peggie promptly had a sinking spell. He recalled the snuffing of the candles by the judge, an extremely depressing memory under the circumstances; also the reckless and headlong disregard of consequences which had characterized so many of that gentleman's acts, and his plans shaped themselves accordingly. With this result. That when the judge took occasion to call at the tavern, and the hostile nature of his visit was anticipated by the cautious manner of his approach, he was greatly shocked to discover that his intended victim had sold his business outright for a small lump sum to Mr. Saul's brother-in-law, who had appeared most opportunely with an offer.

Peggie's flight created something of a sensation, but it was dwarfed by the sensation that developed a day or so later when it became known that Tom Ware and Col. Pentress had likewise fled the country. Still later, Pentress' body, showing marks of violence, was washed ashore at a woodland below Girard. It was conjectured that he and Ware had set out from the Oaks to cross the river; there was reason to believe that Pentress had in his possession at the time a considerable sum of money, and it was supposed that his companion had murdered and robbed him. Of Ware's subsequent career, nothing was ever known.

These were, after all, only episodes in the collapse of the clan, outward manifestations of the great work of disintegration that was going forward and which the judge, more than any other, perhaps, had brought about. This was something no one questioned, and he quickly passed to the first phase of that unique and peculiar esteem in which he was ever after held. His fame widened with the passing years; he had offers of help which impressed him as so entirely creditable to human nature that he quite lacked the heart to refuse them, especially as he felt that in the improvement of his own condition the world had benefited itself and was moving nearer those sound and righteous ideals of morality and patriotism which had never lacked his indorsement, no matter how inexpedient it had seemed for him to put them into practice. But he was not diverted from his ultimate purpose by the glamour of a present popularity; he was able to keep his bleared eyes resolutely fixed on the main chance, namely, the Pentress estate and the Quintana lands. This was highly important, that he should go east to South Carolina to secure documentary evidence that would establish his own and Pentress' identity; to Kentucky, where Pentress had lived prior to his coming to Tennessee.

Early in November the judge set out by stage on his journey east; he was accompanied by Tacey and Hamblin, from neither of whom could he bring himself to be separated; and as the woods, flaming now with the touch of frost, engulfed the little town, he turned in his seat and looked back. He had entered it by that very road, a beggar, on foot and in rags; he was leaving it in broadcloth and new linen, visible tokens of his altered fortune. More than this, he could thrust his hands deep down into his once empty pockets and hear the clink of gold and silver. The judge slowly withdrew his eyes from the last gray roof that showed among the trees, and faced the east and the future with a serenely confident expression.

GENERAL INCREASE IN DISEASE CASES

Typhoid Fever and Diphtheria Among Leaders.

There has been a general increase in the number of contagious diseases in the District during the last week, according to the weekly report of the Health Department, which was made public yesterday afternoon.

Diphtheria, 14 new cases; a new case of scarlet fever, 7 of whooping cough, 11 of typhoid fever, 3 of measles, 11 of chicken-pox, and 19 of tuberculosis were reported to the Health Department during the week.

During the week four grocers, two bakers, and one luncheon proprietor were prosecuted for keeping unclean premises. One druggist forfeited $25 for violation of the pharmaceutical regulations. One confectioner was arraigned in the Police Court for failure to install proper water supply on his premises.

Elks to Honor Dead.
